

THE LAST VIDEO STORE

A proposal for a documentary feature, prepared for financiers who have never rewound anything.

THE OPPORTUNITY

There were once nine thousand video rental stores in this country. There are now fewer than a dozen. Each one that closes takes with it a set of recommendations that existed nowhere else, held by a person who never wrote any of it down.

We propose to film the last year of one of them.

AUDIENCE

The film is for the generation that grew up inside these rooms and for the one that has only ever been handed an algorithm. It argues, gently, that the difference between the two is a person.

BUDGET

A crew of four, ninety shooting days, and the patience to wait for a Tuesday when nothing happens. The full schedule follows overleaf, along with the letters of access we have already secured.

This page exists to be rejected by the screenplay guard, and its prose is padded to make sure the extractor sees a healthy text layer while the parser finds nothing screenplay-shaped in it.
